International Law has been so often broken, and a disorder so profound has replaced the equilibrium formerly so necessary, that all solidarity between the State: has disappeared. A new and egotistical principle has been gradually established—that of non-intervention, of isolation. Left to itself the Ottoman Empire has astonished the world during five months by the bravery of its armies and the real power of its military resistance; but reverses came, and the exhausted Turks have been forced to sue for peace from their victorious aggressor. Now was the moment for Russia to realise the promises made by the Czor at Livadia, and to imitate the generosity which she herself experienced from Policies against FIRE, to the extent of £10,000 the hands of the victorious allies in 1856. The on any Building, or on Merchandise in the same, generosity would have been all the more justified | at the ausual rates, subject to a discount of as Turkey did everything to avoid war in 1877, Twenty per cent. (20%). whereas in 1856 Russia was guilty of having attacked the Porte out of pure ambition, and of having broken her engagements. But the conduct of Russia to day proves how little she is disposed to follow the generous example set be-fore her by the Treaty of Paris. The terms she has dietated to the unfortunate Turkish negotiators show it would be impossible to make a more cruel abuse of victory. Everything that the allies did not impose on Bussia in 1856 she herself imposes on Turkey to-day; everything that she was not made to suffer she inflicts on the vanquished. And Europe is so disorganised. —the principle of "everybody for himself" has led to such profound demoralisation, and weakened the Powers to such a degree, that they dare not come forward and protest in the name of international justice and the Treaty of Paris against the exorbitant and audicious pretensions of Russia. The comparison we have just drawn abundantly proves that Russia was not worthy of the generosity extended to her in 1856 any more than she deserves her victory of 1878."
